52		The second sentence between brackets in the last paragraph is an oversimplification. Though the enterprise was definitely not an autonomous production and commercial unit, and investment was determined by the state, the arrangement was more complex than is indicated here. This matter, and the whole question of cost accounting, will be dealt with in detail in Part Three.

77		At a public meeting held in Dublin in May 1969 on "The Foundations of the Thought of Mao Tse-tung" the Internationalists launched an open attack on Stalin, alleging that he propagated a theory of the dying away of the class struggle under the dictatorship of the proletariat, and announced that the class struggle had come to an end in the Soviet Union in 1936. This nonsense was exposed by ICO members who were present. The Internationalists also took up the fashionable gimmick of comparing Stalin's "Historical and Dialectical Materialism" unfavourably with Mao's "On Contradiction" and "On Practice". Of course these works.
78	25	Mr. Ash, in fact, is no longer the owner of The Marxist. He is the leading member of the "C.P.B.(M/L)", another opportunist group. It was originally intended that The Marxist should be the organ of this group, and Ash was one of the two directors of the company that owned it. But differences of some kind arose between the editorial board of The Marxist and the C. P.B. (R. Birch) group, and the former withdrew support from the latter. At that point Mr. Ash sold his half ownership of The Marxist and peddled his anti-Stalinism in the C.P.B., while Mr. Hardie peddled his variety in The Marxist. We have recently been informed that
