- PASTERNAK, Boris Leonidovich (1890–1960) Russian writer, poet and translator; Nobel Prize winner for 1958; Born: 10 Feb 1890 in Moscow, son of painter Academician L. L. Pasternak; Educ: 1913 grad Philosophy Dept, History and Philology Fac, Moscow Univ; 1912 studied at Marburg Univ under Prof Herman Cohen; Career: raised in a cultured atmosphere of music (his mother Rozaliya Kaufman-Pasternak was a pianist), painting and lit; at first planned a musical career and took composition lessons from A. N. Skryabin, but later turned to philosophical disciplines; later suddenly broke with philosophy as a basis for a profession and turned to lit, although he always maintained a keen interest in philosophical subjects; first lit works date from 1912, when he joined moderate Futurist group which published its own organ "Tsentrifuga"; soon broke with Futurism, selecting his own, independent creative path unconnected with any of the lit schools or trends fashionable at that time; 1914 published his first verse collection Bliznets v tuchakh (A Twin in the Clouds) and in 1917 his verse cycle, contained in the collection Poverk bar'yerov (Above Barriers); the Revol and Civil War were scarcely reflected in his works, and the same is true of his verse collection Sestra moya zhizn' (Life My Sister), published in 1922; placed art above all else, blending it with the world of nature and with life as a whole and generally rejecting revol force and violence as a means of achieving any goal, considering that reality has its own imperatives and does not lend itself to forcible reorganization and that artistic creativity is incompatible with soc commissions; 1922–27 sided with Mayakovskiy's "Lef" (Left Art Front) assoc; 1934 attended 1st USSR Writers' Congress; was one of those writers who were tolerated by Sov regime by dint of their great artistic talent but who were, at the same time, rejected by the Party critics; did a great deal of lit translation, translating works of Goethe, Shakespeare, Kleist, Shelley, Verlaine, Petofi, Hans Sachs and Keats; also translated many Geo poets; particularly effective was his translation of "Faust", published as a monograph in 1955; after WW 2, in addition to a number of poetic works and extensive translations, concentrated on his novel Doktor Zhivago (Doctor Zhivago), which he began to write in 1948, although he derived the basic idea from it prior to WW 2; the essential quality of this novel is that it is written from the standpoint of the spirit, not from the standpoint of matter; the novel outlines the principles of human relationships, based on such qualities as genuine feeling, love and purpose as an inner criterion of life; publication of the novel was refused in the USSR, and in 1957 it was published abroad; in 1958 it brought Pasternak the Nobel Prize for Lit; Pasternak was then subjected to a smear campaign in the Party press and expelled from the USSR Writers' Union and its Translators' Section for "polit and moral decadence and treachery toward the Soviet people, the cause of Socialism, peace and progress"; the question of depriving Pasternak of Sov citizenship and expelling him from the USSR was also raised; as a result of this campaign Pasternak was forced to renounce the Nobel Prize and ask Krushchev to let him spend the rest of his life in his native country; deprived of the right to publish his works and to meet friends and visitors, Pasternak spent his declining years in virtual isolation at the vil of Peredelkino, near Moscow; Publ: verse collections: Bliznets v tuchakh (A Twin in the Clouds) (1914); Poverkh bar'yerov (Above Barriers) (1917); Sestra moya zhizn' (Life My Sister) (1922); Vtoroye rozhdeniye (Second Birth) (1932); Na rannikh poyezdakh (On Early Trains) (1943); Zemnoy prostor (The Earth's Expanse) (1945); collected stories: Rasskazy (Stories) (1925); Dve knigi (Two Books) (1927); Vozdushnyye puti (Air Ways) (1933); poems: Vysokaya bolezni' (High Disease) (1923); Devyat'sot pyatyy god (The Year 1905) (1927); Leytenant, Shmidt (Licutenant Schmidt) (1927); novel in verse "Spektorskiy" (1931); novel "Doktor Zhivago" (Doktor Zhivago) (1957); Izbrannyye perevody (Selected Translations) (1940); Vil'yam Shekspir v perevode B. Pasternaka (William Shakespeare

Ustimovich's Physiological Laboratory, Petersburg Veterinary Inst; 1877 sent abroad to continue studies at Prof Heidenhain's Physiological Laboratory; after grad stayed on at Med Surgical Acad for postgrad studies and until 1889 headed Physiological Laboratory, Prof S. P. Botkin's Therapeutic Clinic; 1880 received second Gold Star for his research; 1883 defended doctor's thesis on Tsentrobezhnyye nervy serdtsa (Efferent Nerves of the Heart); 1884 elected assoc prof, Petersburg Mil Med Acad; 1884–86 worked in Germany at Ludwig and Heidenhain's physiological laboratories; 1890 elected prof-extraordinarius, Chair of Pharmacology, Tomsk Univ; 1890 also elected prof-extraordinarius, Mil Med Acad; 1891–1936 co-founder and head, Physiological Dept, Petersburg (Leningrad) Inst of Experimental Med; 1895 resigned from Chair of Pharmacology and 1895–1925 served as prof of physiology, Mil Med Acad; 1897 confirmed prof-ordinarius; 1901–07 corresp member, from 1907 member, Russian Acad of Sci; 1904 received Nobel Prize for his work Lektsii o rabote glavnykh pishchevaritel'nykh zhelez (Lectures on the Work of the Main Digestive Glands); 1913 designed and supervised construction at Inst of Experimental Med of soundproof chambers for studying conditioned reflexes (so-called "silence towers"), subsequently used for int renewed experiments; from 1924 dir, Inst of Physiology, USSR Acad of Sci; and founder-head of its Biological Station at vil Koltusha (now Pavlovo), near Leningrad; 1935 at 15th Int Congress of Physiologists in Leningrad and Moscow awarded hon title "Elder of World Physiologists"; his physiological research extended to several fields; 1874–88 concentrated on physiology of cardiovascular system; demonstrated presence of special nerve fibers which augment or weaken heart activity; on this basis he later constructed his hypothesis of the nervous system's trophic function; another field of study was the physiology of digestion; in this field devised a number of new techniques and research methods, including special operations on the digestive organs which enabled a "chronic experimental" study of the operation of the digestive apparatus in a healthy animal; 1879 first to diagnose chronic fistula of the pancreatic duct and later devised an operation for chronic fistula of the bile duct; 1894 devised a method for observing the activity of the gastric glands by externalising part of the stomach in the form of an isolated ventricle, fully retaining its neural links with the centr nervous system (Pavlov's small ventricle); 1889 he and Ye. O. Shumova-Simonovskaya combined esophagotomy and gastrotomy in dogs to facilitate an experiment with "imaginary feeding"; as a result of these experiments demonstrated the leading role of the nervous system in regulating the digestive process; in addition, studied the dynamics of the gastric, pancreatic and salivary glands' secretory process as well as the operation of the liver using various foodstuffs and proved that they could adapt to the nature of the various secretory agents used; in an effort to combine the interests of physiology and med, he experimented with sci methods of treating experimentally induced pathological states; closely allied with his work on experimental therapy were his studies of pharmacology; also conducted intensive research into higher nervous activity in animals and man; in this field he did considerable research on the body's connections with its environment via its nervous system; from 1903 gradually developed his theory of conditions and conditioned reflexes; made a detailed study of the laws governing excitation and inhibition processes in the cerebral cortex; established that these processes are closely and even inseparably linked, can irradiate extensively, be concentrated and can mutually affect each other; according to this theory, the entire analyzer and synthesizer activity of the cortex's large hemispheres is based on the complex interplay of these two processes; regarded sleep and hypnosis as processes of inner inhibition radiating widely throughout the cerebral cortex and extending to the subcortical formations; on the basis of his study of conditioned reflex activity of various animals he devised his own classification of types of nervous system; in his latter years specialized in the higher nervous activity of man and advanced a theory of two signal systems of activity: the first – general activity in man and animals, and the second – activity peculiar to man; the second signal system, inseparably linked with the first, enables man to formulate words and, thanks to these words which enable abstraction and the formation of concepts, make possible higher human abstract thinking; apart from his physiological research, engaged in various soc undertakings; 1900 helped draft a program of physical educ for students at the Mil Med Acad and directed gymnastic exercises; 1902 helped organize courses for health officers and lectured on physiology on these courses; after 1917 Oct Revol he was regarded by the higher Party echelons as a polit conservative; on several occasions he expressed his disbelief in the building of socialism and was opposed to Sov philosophy in gen and to dialectical materialism in particular; until the mid-1930's this led to sharp criticism of his works in the USSR; Sov critics termed him a mechanist and idealist who recognized man's subjective world and "the dark forces embodied in man"; his theories of "purpose reflex", "freedom reflex" and his views on training were termed anti-scientific and injurious, while other of his works were said to need reassessment on the basis of dialectical materialism; nevertheless, his sci authority and reputation were so great throughout the world that even in the early years of Sov rule he was given facilities for his sci work; after Pavlov's death, his physiological teaching was reassessed in the USSR from the viewpoint of dialectical materialism and, with certain corrections and the suppression of a number of chapters, recognized as materialistic and fully "in keeping with the teaching of Marx and Engels"; attempts were even made to take his reflex theories as a basis for shaping a new type of Sov man imbued with socialist psychology and free from "survivals of capitalism"; 1950 a joint sci session of the USSR Acad of Sci and USSR Acad of Med Sci devoted to Pavlov's physiological teaching decided to make this teaching the basis of all Sov med, biology and pedagogics; for an entire decade from this date Pavlov's physiological teaching became in the USSR a dogma circumscribing the creative thinking of scientists engaged in the fields of biology, med and pedagogics; all research in these fields was tied into quotations from Pavlov's works, and no work could be published without mentioning his name; after Stalin's death Sov scientists gradually extricated themselves from the dead-end created in Sov med in 1950, and at present Pavlov's teaching, while still the main ideological basis of med sci, does not play the same oppressive role that it did in the latter years of Stalin's life and the first few years after his death; after Pavlov's death many sci institutes and higher educ establishments in the USSR were named for him; Publ: the main body of Pavlov's published works have been issued in a 6-vol ed (2nd ed, 1951–52); Died: 27 Feb 1936 in Leningrad; buried at Volkovo Cemetery.

Stefin) (1879–1953) Revolutionary; Party and govt official; Hero of Socialist Labor; Hero of the Sov Union; secr-gen, CC, CPSU; chm, USSR Council of Min; CP member from 1898; Born: 21 Dec 1879 in Gori, Tiflis Province, son of a shoemaker; Educ: grad Gori Theological College; 1893 entered Tiflis Orthodox Theological Seminary; Career: 1898 joined Tiflis RSDRP Org and was expelled from seminary for unreliability; 1900 elected member, Tiflis RSDRP Comt; 1901 went underground after May Day demonstration; late 1901 moved to Batum and worked for Batum Party Comt; Feb 1902 helped organize strike and polit demonstration; arrested and late 1902 exiled; 1904 fled to Tiflis from Siberian exile and served as member, Transcaucasian Joint Party Comt; directed illegal organ "Bor'ba proletariata"; late 1905 attended Tammerfors Party Conference; 1906 deleg at 4th Stockholm RSDRP Congress; 1907 deleg at 5th London RSDRP Congress; 1906 directed illegal Baku organ "Bakinskiy rabochiy"; Mar 1908 arrested and exiled to Vologda Province; fled and returned to Baku; 1910 rearrested and returned to exile; late 1911 again fled and engaged in underground Party work in Petersburg, where he directed Duma faction and newspapers "Zvezda" and "Pravda"; spring 1913 arrested and exiled to Turukhansk Kray, where he remained until 1917 Feb Revol; after 1917 Feb Revol returned to Petersburg and became member, CC, RSDRP(B); at one time advocated support of Provisional Govt, only abandoning this stand after Lenin's return; 1917 at 6th RSDRP(B) Congress presented CC polit report; at time of 1917 Oct Revol member, group which directed the coup; after 1917 Oct Revol until 1922 Pop Comr of Nationalities in first Council of Pop Comr; 1919–22 also Pop Comr of Peasants' Inspection; 1922, at Lenin's suggestion, elected secr-gen, CC; from 1925 Presidium member, Comintern Exec Comt; from 1917 member, All-Russian Centr Exec Comt; from 1922 member, USSR Centr Exec Comt; from 1937 dep, USSR Supr Sov and supr soviets of all union-republics; 1918–20 member, Revol Mil Council, Southern Front, RSFSR and Western and Southwestern Fronts; defended Lenin's stand in trade-union controversy; late 1923 launched his campaign against Trotsky; 1925 at 14th Party Congress proclaimed program for industrialization of country; at 15th Congress announced collectivization and socialist offensive against capitalist elements in cities and country; 1927 at 15th CPSU(B) Congress expelled Trotskist-Zinov'yevite block from Party; 1929–32 carried out purge of Party and govt apparatus; 1934–38 purged his main opponents, including Bukharin, Zinov'yev, Rykov and Pyatakov; 1939 entitled Hero of Socialist Labor; from 1940 chm, USSR Council of Pop Comr; from 1941 supr commander in chief, Soviet Armed Forces; Feb 1943 entitled generalissimus; many cities, districts, streets and squares in the USSR named for him; Stalin Prizes initiated for outstanding services in sci, culture and art; as secr-gen, CC, CPSU(B) concentrated all power in his own hands and made skillful use of Party apparatus, differences of opinion in leadership and terrorist means to establish his personal, unlimited dictatorship in USSR; at one time Lenin warned the Party against such an eventuality; he wrote that Stalin, after becoming secr-gen of the Party, had "... concentrated tremendous power in his hands, and I am not sure that he is always capable of using this power with due caution ... Stalin is too crude, and this defect, while quite tolerable in the milieu and relations of us Communists, becomes intolerable in the post of secretary-general. I therefore propose, Comrades, that we think of a way of removing Stalin from this post and replacing him with someone else"; 1924 this document, known as Lenin's Testament, was brought to the attention of the delegates at the 13th Party Congress which, after discussing the letter, decided to leave Stalin in this post; as Party and state leader he committed numerous crimes; introduced term "enemy of the people" which automatically precluded the necessity of proof that a person was guilty of ideological errors; this concept enabled ruthless reprisals to be taken against any person suspected — often without the least grounds — of intending to commit a hostile act; justified individual and mass reprisals with the thesis that the class struggle would intensify as the USSR moved nearer to socialism; responsible for millions of victims among the peoples of the Sov Union; a specially appointed Party commission established that of the 139

CC members and cand members elected at the 17th Party Congress, some 70 percent were arrested and executed; Academician A.D. Sakharov maintains that: "... in 1936-39 alone more than 1.2 million CPSU(B) members - or half the Party - were arrested; only 50,000 saw freedom again; the rest were tortured to death during interrogation, executed (600,000) or perished in the concentration camps"; 1956 CPSU CC statement claimed that Stalin "immeasurably overestimated his own merits, laid claim to infallibility, committed a number of grave crimes . . . and applied unworthy methods"; fathered three children, including son Yakov from his first marriage with Mariya; wrote numerous works, collected in "Voprosy leninizma" (Problems of Leninism) and "Sochineniya" (Works); his role in journalism, theoretical works and publ was greatly exaggerated in his lifetime; Died: 5 Mar 1953 in Kuntsevo, near Moscow; interred in Lenin Mausoleum; Oct 1961, by decision of 22nd CPSU Congress, his body was removed from the Mausoleum and buried by the Kremlin Wall on Moscow's Red Square.

TIKHON (secular name: BELLAVIN, Vasily Ivanovich) (1865—1925) Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia from 1917; Born: 19 Jan 1865 in Toropets, Pskov Province; Educ: 1888 grad Petersburg Theological Acad; Career: after grad taught at Pskov Theological Seminary; 1891 took monastic vows name Tikhon and was appointed arch-monk and inspector of Kholm Theological Seminary; soon elevated to archimandrite and appointed rector, above seminary; 1898 consecrated Bishop of Lyublin; and vicar of Kholm Eparchy; 1899 appointed Bishop of Aleutia and Alaska; 1905 elevated to archbishop; 1907 appointed Archbishop of Yaroslavl, but shortly transferred to Vilnius Eparchy; his simplicity and sociability soon made him very popular, and upon his transfer he was made an hon citizen of Yaroslavl; 1914, with the start of WW 1, he was evacuated with the relics of the Vilnius martyrs to Moscow, then settled in Disna, on the periphery of his eparchy, whence he ministered to the troops, visited the front and attended meetings of the Synod; after 1917 Feb Revol removed from Synod; 1917 appointed Archbishop of Moscow; 15 Aug 1917 All-Russian Orthodox Assembly met in Moscow, elevated him to metropolitan and elected him chm of Assembly; 5 Feb 1917 elected by the Assembly Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia; despite Communist terror following Oct Revol, he preached in defense of the faith and denounced Communist atrocities; 19 Jan 1918, in address to ministers of the church and the laity, termed the Bolsheviks' bloody reprisals the work of Satan and excommunicated them from the Church; 26 Oct 1918, in address to Council of Pop Comr, accused Sov regime of deceiving the public, of unprecedented terrorism and of meddling in the Church's internal affairs; when the wholesale arrest of members of the Assembly began, he rejected the idea of emigrating, thereby dooming himself to martyrdom; 1919, after the Bolshevik regime began to persecute the Church in earnest, he forbade the clergy and laity to make any public attacks on the regime; 1921, during the Volga famine, appealed to the laity to organize famine relief and authorized for this purpose the donation of Church valuables not needed for divine service; Sov authorities rejected this offer, coupled as it was the demand that the Church supervise the destination of the funds, and the Patriarch was accused of trying to incite public resistance to the regime; he was proclaimed an enemy of the people and placed under house arrest; the forcible expropriation of Church valuables and various acts of blasphemy provoked widescale protests and resistance on the part of religious believers, leading to some 2,000 trials and executions and the summary liquidation of some 10,000 clergy and believers; Apr 1922 the Patriarch appeared as a witness in the trial of a group of clergy charged with resisting the expropriation of Church valuables and testified that he alone was to blame, since the defendants were merely fulfilling the will of their superior, sent by God; in an effort to save the Church from the "renovationist" schism and spare arrested clergy from execution, the Patriarch made some compromises with the Sov regime; however, this did not satisfy the Bolsheviks, who wanted a person more subservient to their orders on the Patriarchal Throne; fall 1922 the Patriarch was arrested and incarcerated, at first in a monastery and then at Moscow Main Polit Bd (OGPU) headquarters; prior to his arrest the Patriarch had appointed Metropolitan Agafangel his provisional deputy; the arrest of the head of the Russian Orthodox Church triggered int protests: an appeal by Pope Pius XI to the Genoa Conference, a speech by the Archbishop of Canterbury, a protest by the French clergy and appeals by various govts; all this induced the Bolsheviks to free the Patriarch on 26 June 1923; upon his release the Patriarch was in a deplorable physical and spiritual state, none of his concessions had satisfied the Communist govt, since he had steadfastly refused to sacrifice the Church's spiritual freedom or serve the interests of the regime, as his successors were shortly to do; 9 Dec 1923 his private secr was murdered in the Patriarch's presence; Jan 1925 the Patriarch's health was so undermined by his imprisonment, constant interrogation and spiritual distress that he had to be hospitalized; Died: 25 Mar 1925 at the age of 60; in the opinion of Prof Zhizhilenko, Bishop Maksim of the Catacomb Church, the Patriarch was in fact poisoned.
